Highlights:

Younger Parties, Bigger Spenders? Party Age and Political Budget Cycles

Marek Hanusch and Philip Keefer
(The World Bank)

- Political budget cycles are larger when political parties are younger.
- Older parties are more likely to have the organizational characteristics that attenuate political incentives to engage in political budget cycles.
- The results cannot be accounted for by other political characteristics of countries.
- Results account for larger political budget cycles in young democracies.