Course description

1. Prerequisites

There are not mandatory prerequisites, but knowledge of basics of philosophy, contemporary history and political science is preferable.

2. Course Type

Elective.

3. Abstract

The aim of this course is to make students familiar with the major concepts, theories, and debates in Ethnoconflictology – the study of conflictive situations and the appropriate cultural methods of resolving them from an anthropological perspective. Conflict may perhaps be viewed as one of the most intriguing and complex cultural events there exist. It is believed that ethnic conflict is the oldest form of social conflict, and that in fact other types of conflict play only a secondary role.

The present course covers the main theoretical concepts of Ethnoconflictology, discusses sources and dynamics of ethnic conflicts, their typology, strategies of conflict reduction and resolution, and ways to heal the society in the post-conflict period. It exposes students to contemporary advanced theoretical approaches to ethnic identity, conflict, and conciliation in a number of specific situations in the contemporary world. The central theme throughout the course is the role of identity in conflict processes and structures

The course is intended for students wishing to pursue the study of the processes and consequences of ethnic conflict and violence, and of peacemaking and conciliation in the contemporary world. It will be of interest to those with experience in, or considering a career in conflict prevention and resolution, humanitarian relief and conciliation, as well as to those concerned with general representation of conflict and responses to it.

Learning objectives

The present course is designed

- to make students familiar with the major concepts, theories, and debates in Ethnoconflictology;
- to develop and/or foster the ability to critically review published research outcomes, which are based on contemporary research and global best practices in Ethnoconflictology;
- to cultivate students' ability to prepare reports in the proper academic form on topics related to ongoing research activities.

Learning outcomes

By the end of the course, students will have mastered the key ideas, concepts and theories of Ethnoconflictology. They will also have developed logical skills that will allow them to build arguments to discuss and analyze issues related to conflicts. They will also be able to use the introduced knowledge to present own arguments in a written essay.

The competences expected by the end of the course:

Code (RUS)	Code (ENG)	Competence description
CK-1	SC-1	Ability to analyze acquired research methods and interpret the results of the research
CK-6	SC-6	Ability to analyze, verify and assess information, synthesize any lacking details and work in uncertain conditions
CK-3	SC-3	Ability to learn new research methods and approaches on his/her own, to evolve professionally
CK-8	SC-8	Ability to carry out research and other professional activities in an international environment
IKK-3	PC-3	Ability to freely use foreign languages for professional communication
IKK-4	PC-4	Ability to communicate effectively with different audiences, to deliver her/his message clearly and to tailor it depending on the audience's age, education, attitude to the speaker, etc.
IKK-5	PC-5	Ability to report the work results and present them according to required standards
