

Miska Simanainen (Social Insurance Institution of Finland) is one of the researchers who are conducting the official evaluation study of the Finnish basic income experiment. His current research interests and daily research activities concern both the politics and the effects of social security and income tax policies. In 2016, he conducted simulation studies on the effects of a basic income in Finland. His professional background ranges from policy evaluation projects to the production of official statistics and development of policy evaluation methods.