Programme Overview

This dual Master's degree program in Economics, Politics, and Business in Asia from HSE and Kyung Hee University is ideally suited for those that would like to supplement their specialization with knowledge of business management, law, ethics, and international relations in East Asia with due regard for local specificities. It is designed for those that plan to build their future careers relating to East Asian countries in Russian or international companies, start their own business in their own country or abroad, or excel in politics or public administration.

The program is founded on the best academic traditions of Russia and the world for preparing Master's candidates and gives graduates competitive advantages in the labor market. The program enlists the best teaching staff, as well as bright specialists and practitioners, who enrich the learning process by using their own personal examples and business cases.

Since 2016, HSE has been included in the QS World University Rankings by Subject for Politics & International Studies. In 2023, it joined the 51-100 group, which is the best result among Russian universities.

Main Advantages of the Program

Leading teachers from Russia and abroad, whose qualifications meet high international selection criteria.

Academic curricula and program disciplines,
which have been developed in accordance with international standards.

The second and third semester spent at Kyung Hee University, which aim at an in-depth study of the economic, political, legal, and socio-cultural landscape of China, the Republic of Korea, and Japan, as well as of international relations and the particularities of conducting business in such countries.

Studying in English, which gives students the opportunity not only to communicate freely in an international academic community, but also to perfect existing skills of academic writing, as well as public speaking in the English language. In addition, this mode of study helps broaden one's horizons and go beyond a university education in a single country.

Studying a second foreign language elective
Chinese, Korean, or Japanese (at the student's choice) - which enables graduates to communicate effectively in business contexts with representatives from businesses or government bodies in East Asian countries and work successfully in cross-cultural teams.

Contemporary methods of study, which include using the newest textbooks and training manuals of Korea, China, Japan, Russia, the USA, and European countries. Availability of university library. Access to vast informational and educational databases, subscriptions, and electronic libraries from two of the largest universities.

Internships
at leading Russian and international companies located in Russia, Korea, China, and Japan, as well as at research institutions and government agencies.

Networking
among graduates and students of partner schools of the Master's program; there are many foreign students from China, Korea, and Japan who are building successful careers.

During the studies

While in the programme, students are simultaneously enrolled at both universities and pursue one of two tracks: Business in Asia or International Relations in Asia.

The Business in Asia track involves training specialists on organizational and managerial topics related to international business in China, Korea and Japan. At Kyung Hee University, students will study in the Faculty of Business and Management and receive an MBA - Asian Business.

The International Relations in Asia track involves training specialists in international relations with a focus on political and economic processes in Asia. At Kyung Hee University, students will study in the Faculty of Foreign Regional Studies and receive a Master of International Relations.

The first and last semesters of the programme will take place in Moscow, while the second and third semesters will be completed in Seoul.

Career opportunities

Graduates of the programme will have managerial skills in international business, as well as knowledge of the principles and unique characteristics of business communication and business ethics in East Asia. They will be prepared to pursue careers in the following fields:

- Business
- Public service
- Science and education
- Analysis
- International journalism
