

Basic requirements for writing a student paper topic in Russian

- The name of the topic is entered without quotes (“”) and without a period (.) at the end;
- the first word of the title is written with a capital letter;
- no grammar mistakes and unnecessary symbols.

Basic requirements for writing a topic in English

- adhere to the British spelling of words, for example, Labour (Labor), Modelling (Modeling), Centre (Center), etc.;
- the name of the topic is entered without quotes and without a period at the end;
- Quotes should not be used and are simply omitted, for example, The Role of Black Accounting, not The Role of "Black" Accounting;
- special characters (except &) should not be used, for example, instead of @ we write at, instead of $ we write Dollar (s);
- ampersand “&” can be used instead of and ("and"), especially if you need to reduce the number of characters in the topic name;
- the first and last words of the title are always written with a capital letter, including articles, prepositions, etc;
- all other words are written with a capital letter, except:
 1. articles (a, an, the) - they are written with a small letter;
 2. conjunctions and prepositions in which there are less than 4 letters, for example, in, and, but, for we write with a small letter, and Upon, Towards, Without, Between - with a capital letter;
 3. particles to before the infinitive, for example, to Play;
 4. those forms of the verb to be in which there are less than 4 letters, for example, am, was, but Were, Being;
 5. in compound words written with a hyphen, the second word will be written with a lowercase letter if it is a definition to the first word or a part of speech other than the first. For example: Classics-at-Home, Security-related (the second word is a definition to the first), How-to (the second word is a different part of speech than the first).
